

Dyed hands grip wooden blocks dipped in coloured inks.

They press herring-bone patterns onto broad cotton lengths like an ancient vellum, stamped with religious text.

When hung to dry
they sway on the breeze like the scaled bodies of fish.