

To make a light – pull
for her dark room
she thumbed clay
into a plaster mould.

It slid
into inner curves,
arches and bows.

Once freed – it was rubbed.

Once dried – it was warmed.

Birtherd

in flame and veined
with a skin of smoke.

It became a beautiful thing - to her.